So what better time than now, as we move to May, to celebrate that? I've long celebrated May 10 by honoring motherhood and all the women who have loved and nurtured my sons, and I've always included Mother's Day in that. But I've never done anything special. A few years ago, I realized that I could include a Mother's Day appreciation in the hands-on part of Mother's Day, a way that as mothers, we could express how we appreciate our mothers by helping them, and giving them the experience of doing something that they have loved and are good at, even if it's something as simple as opening a gift with a mother or giving a small gift for a mother, rather than a large gift. Fast forward a year or two, and I wanted to include something in addition to the Mother's Day Handyman Kit, and thought that the Handy Mom would be a great way to go. Over the last few years, I've been learning about being a Handy Mom through my own Hands-On Motherhood journey. Even though my boys are not still kids, their kids are young adults and are still quite dependent on Mom (as are my nephews and nieces!). I want to encourage women, especially new mothers, to think about their new caregiving 3da54e8ca3
