Note When you first start Photoshop, you'll see a panel at the bottom of the workspace listing the last few panels you used. However, you may have merged several panels on the panel stack, so the list may be out of date. To update the list, click the big plus sign next to the panel stack; Figure 8-3 to see the list of the panels you've merged.")). # Image Masks A _mask_ is a layer in Photoshop that makes certain parts of an image transparent (or invisible). Masking can be used for a wide variety of purposes—it can transform a landscape photo into a cityscape, for example—but the most common use is for retouching. If you adjust the color of one area of an image, the color of the rest of the image will be unaffected. A mask on the subject will make the adjustment to that area, but all other areas of the image will be unaffected, like a layer in the background. The easiest way to create a mask is to click the color-mixing eyedropper and click the part of the photo you want to make transparent. Photoshop automatically creates a new layer and creates a mask with the color of the area you selected. As

Schwartz Center The Schwartz Center for the Arts (commonly known as the Schwartz Center), located at the University of Maryland, College Park, is a performing arts hall that hosts musical and theatrical performances. With of indoor space, the Schwartz Center can seat 500 people for performances. History In 1930, John W. McConnell, an English professor at the University of Maryland, was principal founder and first director of a drama club called the Laurel Players, named after Laurel, Maryland. The theatre group established a small theatre, a building on the campus of Maryland College, just across South Campus Drive from the Hilltop. In 1943, John W. McConnell died suddenly of a cerebral hemorrhage at the age of 44. During the early years after his death, the Laurel Players continued to perform. The building was named the McConnell Memorial Theatre. Its director was George Tewes. McConnell's widow, Louise McConnell Schofield, who was originally from Union City, New Jersey, a suburb of Newark, New Jersey, was instrumental in the organization of a memorial fund for the theatre and its operations. She was named its first director. She became a trustee of the college and the theatre and a friend of President James T. Young. In 1948, Louise McConnell Schofield decided to house the theatre group under the University of Maryland and turned it over to the college. She served as its first director until 1966. In 1962, the government of the United States contributed $10,000 to develop the building into a performing arts complex. The building was renamed the Louise G. Schofield Theatre. In the years between 1963 and 1966, the school's musical theatre department was added and a gifted team of faculty and students made significant contributions to the theater program. The university's scenic arts department was formed in 1966. James McMurtry, then director of scenic arts, was among those who contributed to the addition of the Hayes Little Theatre in 1970. In 1967, Louise G. Schofield died, aged 84. In the fall of 1968, the building was renamed the Louise G. Schofield Theatre. Louise Schofield was remembered in an inscription on the facade. In the spring of 1970, dramatic and visual arts professor William Fitzsimmons became the director of the theater. Soon after, Fitzsimmons was named the theater's associate director
