Zip file of.An atmospheric particulate filter for reducing the concentration of particles, such as soot, oxides of nitrogen and the like, in an exhaust gas from an internal combustion engine, has hitherto been known. This particulate filter is disposed in an exhaust passage of the engine. The particulate filter is a catalyst substrate on which a catalyst is supported. The particulate filter includes a casing made of a ceramic material; a honeycomb structure constituted by a plurality of cells partitioned by thin straight through-holes and long thin through-holes each having a circular cross-section; and catalyst substrates supported on the honeycomb structure inside the casing. Further, the engine is provided with a porous exhaust gas purifying catalyst of a temperature area incapable of being activated at a temperature of the exhaust gas from the engine and a catalytic converter of a temperature area incapable of being activated at a temperature of the exhaust gas from the engine (refer to Patent Document 1). The catalyst substrate of this configuration has cells of small diameters on a portion of its inlet side end portions where the exhaust gas from the engine will enter
